Moving to compel arbitration is not a new defense tactic, however, the legal landscape created by the federal courts is ever evolving. As a result, preparing and litigating an effective motion to compel is a moving target. During this webinar, the presenters will discuss the basics of using a motion to compel arbitration as an effective defense tool and common factual and legal hurdles which may need to be overcome for a successful motion, as well as provide a survey of recent caselaw affecting how to present and litigate a successful motion to compel arbitration.

Shannon Miller, with Maurice Wutscher, focuses his practice on various aspects of financial services law, with an emphasis on consumer financial services litigation. He has successfully represented healthcare and financial institutions and law firms throughout the country for claims filed under the Fair Debt Collection Practices Act, Fair Credit Reporting Act, and various state consumer protection statutes. Shannon has first-chaired more than 100 trials. He is a former prosecutor for the Delaware County Office of the District Attorney, where he investigated and prosecuted white collar crimes, and other felonies.

Nicole M. Strickler, Partner with Messer Strickler Burnette, is a seasoned litigator focusing her practice in the defense of consumer financial services litigation throughout the country. This includes representing clients in both individual and class actions involving state and federal consumer protection laws, such as Fair Debt Collection Practices Act, Fair Credit Reporting Act, Telephone Consumer Protection Act, and similar state laws. Her clients include corporations, lending institutions, collection agencies, asset purchasers, lawyers as well as individuals. She is routinely solicited to speak before national industry trade organizations, and in publications, concerning issues affecting the credit and collection industry. She has held a seat on the National Creditors Bar Association since early 2016.
